Fallas is a traditional celebration held in commemoration of Saint Joseph in the city of Valencia. The term Fallas (or Falles in Valencian) refers to both, the celebration and the figures burnt during the celebration. A number of towns in the Valencian community have similar celebrations inspired by the original Fallas de Valencia celebration.

Each neighbourhood of the city has an organised group of people and an own space to meet and organize, the Casal Faller. They work all year long holding fundraising parties and dinners, usually featuring the famous Valencian dish, paella, a specialty of the region.

Each commission, also known as a comissió fallera produces a construction known as Falla, which is eventually burnt. Overnight at the hotel in Valencia.

After lunch, about 14h, don't miss the Mascletà, daily fireworks all the month of March.

The Mascletà is an explosive barrage of coordinated firecracker and fireworks displays and takes place in each neighbourhood at 14h every day of the festival, where the pyro-technicians compete for the honour of providing the final Mascletà of the fiestas (on 19 March). At 14h the clock chimes and the Fallera Mayor, dressed in her Fallera finery, will call from the balcony of city hall "senyor pirotècnic, pot començar la Mascletà!" ("mr. Pyrotechnic, you may commence the Mascletà!"), and the Mascletà begins.

The Mascletà is almost unique in the Valencian community, and very popular within the Valencian people. Smaller neighbourhoods often hold their own Mascletà for saint's days, weddings and other celebrations.

A statue of the Virgin Mary and its large pedestal are then covered with all the flowers.Overnight at the hotel in Valencia.

In the nights of the 15, 16, 17, and 18th March there are firework displays in the old riverbed in Valencia. Each night is progressively grander and the last is called La Nit del Foc (the night of the fire).

Day 7: March 19th - Valencia

Breakfast at the hotel.

The great day has come! You can take your morning for shopping or rest, to prepare yourself for La Nit de la Cremà, where the winner statues are announced and the other ones are burned to celebrate the end of the event.

On the final night of the Fallas, around midnight on March 19 these Fallas are burnt as huge bonfires. This is known as La Cremà (the burning), the climax of the whole event, and the reason why the constructions are called Falles in Valencian ("torches"). Traditionally, the Falla in the Plaça de l'Ajuntament is burned last.

Many neighbourhoods have a Falla Infantil (a children's Falla, smaller and without satirical themes), which is shown a few metres away from the main one and is burnt first, at 22h. The main neighbourhood Fallas are burnt closer to midnight.

Each Falla is loaded with fireworks which are lit first. The construction itself is lit either after or during the explosion of these fireworks. Fallas burn quite quickly, and the heat given off is felt by everyone around. The heat from the larger ones often drives the crowd back a couple of metres, even though they are already behind barriers that the fire brigade has set several metres from the construction.

Away from the Fallas, people frolic in the streets, the whole city resembles an open-air dance party. There are stalls selling products such as the typical fried snacks porres, xurros and bunyols, as well as roasted chestnuts or trinkets.
